More than 150 Long Islanders learn how to develop a successful grant application

Brentwood, NY – On Friday, Rep. Steve Israel (D – Huntington) held a grant writing workshop for more than 150 Long Islanders representing non-profits, small businesses, churches, schools and municipalities.

“With cutbacks across the board, applying and competing for grant funding is more important than ever. I want to make sure our Long Island organizations are able to take full advantage of grants to continue serving our community in tough times,” said Rep. Israel.

With support from the U.S. Office of Minority Health Resource Center and the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, the grant writing workshop addressed accessing Grants.gov, researching relevant grant opportunities and how to develop a successful application.

Rep. Israel’s office is available to assist organizations in applying for federal grants. Contact the Long Island office at 631-951-2210.